Iran-Iraq: Current Situation

The first phase of Iran's offensive on the Doveyrij River front was a total failure. [redacted]

-- On 9 February, Revolutionary Guards with limited regular infantry and armored support penetrated five kilometers behind the Iraqi lines. A subsequent Iraqi counterattack cutoff and surrounded the Iranians.

-- As of 14 February the Iraqis still hold their original front lines east of Al Amarah.

Apart from improvements in Iraqi intelligence and combat performance, the Iranian defeat stems from a number of factors:

- Inadequate intelligence on Iraqi tactical dispositions.
- Poor coordination between regular and irregular units.

-- Severe material shortages that have caused sharp reductions in support from artillery and attack helicopters. Iranian fighter-bombers were not used for ground attack missions.

[redacted] In his Friday prayer session, Khamenei took a typically hard line, reemphasizing Iran's commitment to deal the Iraqis "final blow." He also said that the "punishment of the aggressor is more important to us than regaining" territories occupied by Iraq, possibly leading to a misinterpretation of Iran's position by diplomats in Tehran.
